Instead, in a high turnout, the Christian Democrats took only 45.6 percent of the vote and 52 seats, while Mr. Schmidt's Social Democrats — leaping almost 10 percentage points over opinioo-poll forecasts — cornered 42.8 percent and 49 seats. Ratifying its claim to be the country's third political force, the radical-populist Green protest movement won 8 percent of the vote, and 9 seats; the party the Greens have displaced, the Free Democrats, sank to an all-time low of 3.1 percent, and no seats.

the Free Democrats. Party Survival in Doubt

The severest judgment was meted out to the Free Democrais, whose survival as a party is now open to question. Mr. Genscher says the Free Democrats are "con-demned" to go forward with their plans to help vote Mr. Kohl into office on Friday. The party's left wing, which heatedly opposes this move, has no realistic alternative that will guarantee the organization's existence.

Acceptance of Mr. Schmidt's call for an all-party pact to dis-solve parliament now and to hold elections could mean the extinotion of the Free Democrats as a national political organization if, as in Hesse, they skidded below the 5-percent barrier occided for parliamentary representation.

Ironically, however, the Hesse vote was also a reversal for Mr. Genscher's arch political foe, Franz Josef Strauss, the leader of the Christian Democrats' independent Bavarian sister party. Mr. Strauss has argued that the Bonn alliance with the Free Democrats is unnecessary, since the Christian Democrats are now capable of winning a nationwide majority.

The Christian Democrats' 45.6percent showing in Hesse under-cuts Mr. Strauss's thesis, suggest-ing strongly that coalition-building is still imperative to govern in West Germany. Meetings Monday and Tuesday will show whether Mr. Strauss limits his demands on the humbled Free Democrats, permitting them to contemplate a per-(Continued on Page 2, Col 1)

Palestinian residents gave the French and Italians a warm wel-come, some with tears in their eyes, as the first patrols spread out in the filthy, twisting streets of Sa-bra and Chatila camps where hun-dreds of civilians were massacred

The last troops of the French and Italian contingents arrived Monday, hringing the total pres-ence in West Beirut to roughly 2,200. The State Department announced Monday that 1,200 U.S. marines would take up positions at Beirut's international airport, probably beginning Wednesday.

Israeli military spokesmen said Sunday that the army would officially complete its withdrawal from the western sector by Wednesday and from "all of Beirut," including the Christian eastern sector, by the end of the Italy's ambassador, Franco Lucicli Ottieri, said that the French and Italians had decided to go ahead with the deployment of their forces at the urging of Lebanon's new president, Amin Gemayel, who was anxious for a demonstratioo of the peacekeeping force's presence in the camps.

The ambassador said that the decision was made "on the spot" Monday morning after a meeting of the three Western ambassadors and representatives of the Lebaoese Army under the chairmanship of President Gemayel.

A French Army spokesmen said that two companies of paratroopers, or roughly 240 men, established themselves inside the camps early Mooday afternoon and that the rest of the French cootingent would deploy there on Tuesday. Another 100 to 200 Italian paratroopers also took up positions in the camp Monday. Meanwhile, the fate of residents in the camps appeared to be in question as local press reports said that the Lebanese government hoped to reduce the oumber of Palestinian civilians in Lebanon from its present estimated 500,000 to as few as 50,000.

Moscow Has Arrested 4 Scientists As Spies for CIA, Paper Discloses

Washington Past Service MOSCOW — Four Soviet scientists have been arrested on charges of having spied for the U.S. Central lotelligence Agency, the oewspaper Moskovskaya Pravda dis-closed Monday. The disclosure came in a long at-

The article, reflecting the cur-

"It's amazing," said Detective Jerry Campbell of the 110th Pre-cinct, which includes Elmhurst. "Anything God put on this earth, we've got at least two of them here in this precinct." No one quite knows why so many different foreigners flock to Elmhurst, which is about an 18-minute subway ride from Times Square. Housing is cheaper than m Manhattan, but no more so than in many other neighborhoods. There is nothing about the community's layout or services that would naturally attract the foreign-born.

Still, immigrants arrive every day, having been given the green light by relatives and friends or friends of friends, often oblivious to how international a center it re-

Elmhurst sits in the heart of the borough of Queens, adjoining such other increasingly immigrant com-munities as Rego Park, Jackson Heights, Corona and Woodside. Walk down Broadway, the area's principal commercial strip, and it resembles the main street of a small town. Look again, and the serpentine stretch that runs from Roosevelt Avenue, which separates Elmhurst from Jackson Heights, to Queens Boulevard is an exotic thoroughfare.

"This place sure has changed," said the Rev. David Boyce, looking out at the huge electric rice cookers that now sit on the kitchen counter at the Dutch Reformed Church whose congregation is predominantly Oriental Now, instead of coffee Sunday afternoons the church serves oolong.

Few foreigners find life easy here. Elmhurst is a place where families are often crowded five to a room and work as many as 14 hours a day, seven days a week. Many hold two or three jobs. It is a place of extremes: A Yugoslav handyman and his wife, who cleans office buildings at night in Manhattan, saved up $90,000 to buy a new home, but a young Colombian busboy who came to the United States last year to seek his fortune paces the floor at night, torn between subsisting here or swallowing his pride and going home.

Perhaps because of the nature of the Lebanese population, split be-tween Moslems and Christians, blood fends in this country are enduring and the occasional periods of truce are uneasy.

When Mr. Assad asked Mr. Jumblat why he would not, Mr. Jumblat reportedly answered: They did it to us in 1860 and we want to do it to them now." The Debate Goes On: Do U.S. Social Programs Really Help the Poor?

By Herbert H., Denton

Washington For Sorter

WASHINGTON — As Ronald Reagan prepared to run for president four years ago, his chief domestic nitvier stirred public controversy with the flat assertion that economic growth and the "explosive increase" in government social spending over the previous decade had "virtually niminated poverty in the United States."

"The "War on Poverty that began in 1964 has been won," Martin Anderson, who later became Mr. Reagan's first White House assistant for poli-

This fall, as Mr. Reagan finds himself sharply criticized for being uncaring and unfair in his deep cuts in federal social programs, the president's counterattack is that government programs of the last generation not only failed to reduce poverty but also brought to a "tragic half" the economic progress the poor were making before president Johnson's "Great Society" programs.

Mr. Reagan's new thesis was expressed in detail in a speech this month to the National Black Republican Council and repeated last week in re-marks to black college presidents. He contends that the "binge" in social spending, by "eating away at the underpinnings of the free enterprise system," was responsible for double-digit inflation and high unemployment that had the ironic result of locking the poor in poverty. Few would argue with Mr. Reagan's contention that a healthy economy helps the poor more than social programs do. But whether the programs were failures or the sole cause for serious economic trouble, as he has suggested frequently, are issues about which disagreement has been considerable.

Mr. Reagan's thesis ignores any possible impact on the economy of the $141 billion spent for the Vietnam War or skyrockening oil prices over the last decade. A barrel of Saudi Arabian light crude, for example, cost $1.80 in 1970, $11.51 in 1976 and is $34 today.

"I don't think he was trying to give a complete economic discourse of the last generation," a White House aide retorted amid discussion of

In attacking the Great Society before the black Republicans, Mr. Reagan cited only two pro-grams as examples of billions of dollars wasted. They were federal urban renewal and Model Cities, curious choices to defend his cuts since both have been dead at least eight years and urban renewal was created fully 15 years before the

The food stamp program has been one of Mr. Reagan's favorite targets because of its tremendous growth in cost. From about $33 million in when the pilot program served 633,000 persons in scattered communities, its cost grew to $65 billion by 1979 when, as a nationwide program, it served 19 million Americans.

The National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity, in a report to Mr. Reagan last September, found dramatic differences, for example, in what happened to blacks in the North and South over the last generation.

"But the rate of poverty among northern blacks, after nearly two decades of economic growth and civil rights legislation, has declined only marginally in 20 years. There are one million more blacks poor in the northern and western states today than in 1959."

Waste, sloth and outright thievery in government-funded programs have been demonstrated and, as Mr. Reagan suggests, many well-intentioned programs did not produce intended re-

In an effort to help capture more congressional seats this fall, White House officials have asked for lists from federal agencies of all upcoming grants for such things as housing projects and bridges, so Mr. Reagan or Republican candidates can make the election-year announcements.

This is standard procedure for White House campaigning. But in Mr. Reagan's case it has a particular irony, because the administration has sought to convince Congress over the last 21 months that Washington should provide less, not more, in the way of federal aid

By R.W. Apple Jr. BLACKPOOL England — The Labor Party, after a tumultuous debate, approved Monday a measure designed to purge key mem-bers of its left wing in the hope of improving its chances of winning the next general election.

By a margin of 3-to-1, the par-ty's annual conference in this re-sort on the Irish Sea voted to es-tablish a register of approved affil-iated organizations — from which iated organizations — from which the party leadership plans to ex-clude the leaders of the Militant Tendency, a Trotskyite group with a staff of 60 organizers and several thousand active followers.

Mr. Foot defended the constitution, arguing that it had always provided "the sheet anchor at moments of tempest and strain' that had prevented the party from "fragmenting into sectarian move-ments." If Mr. Foot is able to carry the day with the new executive committee, the local parties that selected nominees from Militant Tendency will presumably be forced to make new selections or risk having new selections imposed upon them by the national leadership. The process would take many months.

The conference rejected motions opposing the register and deferring the whole question for a year, then approved Mr. Foot's plan.

Hong Kong Treaties Valid, Thatcher Says

HONG KONG - Prime Minis-ter Margaret Thatcher of Britain said Monday that the treaties made with China in the last century that gave possession of Hong Kong to Britain were valid and could not be abrogated by one Concern that the talks in Beijing had produced tothing concrete was followed by heavy selling on the Hong Kong stock market Monday. An index of leading shares fell 84 points to close at 1.012. The value of the Hong Kong dollar slipped from 6.15 to the U.S. dollar to 6.18.

Mrs. Thatcher agreed with Chinese leaders to start talks immediately with the aim of preserving Hong Kong's prosperity and sta-bility. At the same time, China said it would eventually reclaim sovereignty over the whole of Hong Kong.

U.S. Weather Satellites Inoperable; Pentagon Relies on Civilian Craft

By Robert C. Toth

Los Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — The highly sophisticated, multimillion-dollar satellites launched by the Pentagon to gather weather data critical for U.S. military and intelligence operations have been virtually inoperable for at least 17 months. U.S. military and civilian officials

As a result, the Defense Department has been forced into the embarrassing position of depending on less complex civilian satellites using the same data that goes to local weathermen.

Officials say the civilian data have become so important that the air force has classified key aspects of its meteorological satellite program as secret.

And the Pentagon has strongly opposed a recent offer from private industry to take over the gov-ernment's weather satellites and land-sensing satellites. The Na-tional Environmental Satellite Service now runs the weather system and also will soon take over the Landsat system, which takes pic-tures used for such things as exploring for oil and studying crop

To pacify the Pentagon, the mmerce Department, of which the satellite service is a part, said this month that any private buyer of the weather satellite system would have to consider providing selected priority service to defense needs when required."
An air force public affairs officer, Captain Ron Rand, said last week that the entire military weather satellite program is not classified, but he said "the number of defense meteorological satellites in orbit and the percentage of their design capacity at which they are now operating is classified."

Captain Rand said the new classification was imposed about 17 or 18 months ago. Other officials said it went into effect almost two years ago. The result is that the air force refuses to say whether any of its weather satellites are in space and how poorly they are working. Sources said, however, that of the two military weather satellites in polar orbit, one is spinning uselessly out of control. On the second satellite, the primary instru-ment — the imager, which in effect—and wind speeds.

The air force would offer no rea-son for the recent satellite failures and refused to discuss plans for fu-ture launchings. Sources said, how-ever, that a new weather satellite is expected to be launched in a few

The two military weather satel-lites in polar orbit are almost identical in size — weighing about 1,600 pounds (727 kilograms) and in appearance as two civilian satellites also in north-to-south or bits, but the military satellites were designed to take more detailed pictures and collect a greater variety

One measure of the importance of the two civilian weather satel lites to the Pentagon was an official navy commendation last-month to the National Environmental Satellite Service for providing "the only high-quality satellite data available" on the Falkland Islands region during the British Argentine war.

Apparently, not even U.S. spy satellites could take pictures as well as the weather spacecraft, possibly because the reconnaissance satellites, whose primary focus is the Soviet Union, do not range so far south or are too high in space when passing over the far southern

The civilian service operates, in addition to the two satellites in po-lar orbits, two high altitude satellites that are in geosynchronous, or stationary, orhits 22,300 miles (35,680 kilometers) above the equator. One photographs the Western Hemisphere, and the other covers the Eastern Hemisphere, every half hour.

The civilian polar-orbiting satellites, which are "sun synchronous" so that they can return over the same spot on the equator with the son at the same angle, measure air temperatures at various altitudes, sea water temperature, cloud cover

If Mr. Hayden, 42, the Democratie nominee for the California Legislature for a Los Angeles area district, wins the Nov. 2 election against Bill Hawkins, 34, the Republican candidate, there are CED members and CED-backed local officials across the state to support him politically — an asset for a freshman legislator.

CED claims 12,000 dues-paying members. It has 16 full-time paid staff members and employs about 15 canvassers in a door-to-door membership drive, according to a spokesman, Stephen Rivers. State neadquarters are in Santa Monica, where the Haydens live. Membership dues combined with revenues from The Workout boost the 1982 annual budget of its general fund close to $500,000, Mr. Rivers said. It also has a separate tax-exempt education fund with a 1982 budget of about $85,000 to work on alternative energy and environmental causes of cancer, Mr. Rivers said. Its political action fund, which provides contributions to CED-backed candidates, will spend about $200,000 in 1982, he added.

Mr. Hayden's campaign finances are separate from CED.
He spent $497,071 during 1981 and the first half of this year, including a $33,254 contribution from the CED political action fund.

Mr. Hayden says his legislative goals and the organization's pro-gram would overlap on issues such as solar energy, investment of pen-sion funds in housing and high-technology industries, support for working women's organizations, social services for senior citizens, offshore oil drilling and smog.

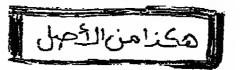

Mr. Hawkins has called his bat-ile with Mr. Hayden "a campaign of support for the free enterprise system vs. the Campaign for Eco-nomic Democracy."

Critics' fears that economie democracy means socialism are fueled by statements like the defintion of economic democracy of-fered in the invitation to a 1977 conference in Santa Barbara, Cali-fornia, that led to the organiza-tion's founding:

"Economic democracy means that a few bundred corporate leadegs will no longer make basic eco-nomic decisions that affect all of

The Chinese prime minister's comments prompted interest here since they followed a fresh over-ture Sunday by Leonid L Brezhnev in a speech made by the Soviet leader in the Soviet city of Baku.

Mr. Brezhnev said that the Soviet Union wanted to "achieve a normalization, a gradual improvement of relations" with China. Their relationship has remained chilly fol-lowing their ideological rift two decades ago.

According to another Japanese source, Mr. Zhao also told Mr. Suzuki that contacts between Beijing and Moscow might increase but said that this did not mean that the Chinese had allayed their suspicions. Scrimping on Aid

President Reagan's foreign and policy — what's good for Uncle Sugar is good for Upper Volta — is rooted in the belief that freemarket private enterprise is the road to economic development for rich and poor nations alike. For that reason, he has de-emphasized America's contribution to multilateral aid for the truly needy. That policy has now backfired in an unfortunate compromise at the International Development Association, the World Bank affiliate that makes interest-free, 50-year loans to the poorest countries.

In 1980, when the 33 countries supporting IDA pledged $12 billion more to raise the agency's resources to $30 billion, the United States promised $3.2 billion over three years. But the Reagan administration renounced this commitment, saying it would pay up only over four years. Because the United States contributes so much of the IDA's capital, the effect was devastating. Loan commitments had to be slashed by 35 percent last year. A.W. Clausen, the American banker who heads the World Bank and the IDA, said, "This is not trimming a program; this is amputating a program."

The other contributors - most importantly Western Europe and Japan - are paying their three-year pledges on schedule. Most have also agreed to a fourth-year payment to make up for America's foot-dragging. However, six of the principal contributors — France, Canada, Italy, Norway, Sweden and Denmark - are each requiring that their fourth-year funds be used only to purchase their own goods and services. If Upper Volta borrows French francs for irrigation, it will have to spend them in France even if American equipment and Australian engineers could serve it better. This is known as "tied aid" — selfishness cloaked in generosity. It not only violates the spirit of unfettered multilateral aid, it is the antithesis of free markets. It is protectionism.

The Reagan administration refuses to ask Congress to speed up payments. Worse, Congress may not even appropriate as much as the administration has asked. Even assuming that the United States pays the pledged amount, the IDA will need replenishment after next year or be forced to reduce its leading to a trickle. The administration has set a discouraging precedent by its parsimony. May the counterproductive consequences prove enlightening.

The Salvadoran Tunnel

Is that a flock of light at the end of the tunnel in El Salvador? Through the Costa Ri-cans, a line has been opened between El Salvador's appointed president and the leader of the guerrillas' political allies. The Salvadoran government, having put on paper a "pact" signed by the parties that took part in parliamentary elections last March, now speaks of a "peace commission" to develop "a practical amnesty and disarmament program [covering the guerrillas], probably in conjunction with some form of security guarantees to persuade the political parties who refused to run candidates for election in March to join in the electoral process." Guerrilla groups hiat that they may drop some of the demands the government found unacceptable in the past.

The picture is one of hesitation, skepticism and resistance at both extremes. But there is also a sense of possible movement toward consensus that has not existed since reform-minded officers overthrew the old feudal apparatus in 1979 and the revolutionaries, thus pre-empted, moved to civil war.

The government's reform and military programs, flawed as they are, may have something to do with these tentative stirrings. Their principal source, however, appears to be the elections last March. These strengthened politics as the arena in which the masses of Salvadorans plainly wish to work out their country's destiny. This in turn gave a better purchase to those within the Salvadoran po-litical system who doubt that the country can endure a military struggle to the end, and who wish to try to split the left and draw in those parts of it that are open to political competition. The same strengthening of political tendencies may have touched the left. At the least, the high popular participation in the elections, despite a fierce guerrilla cam-paign to spoil the poll, undercut any guerrilla argument that the masses could be won over or intimidated by armed struggle.

If the elections and their delayed aftermath are the key elements, it cannot be irrelevant that the signals coming from Washington changed subtly during the summer. The United States continues to insist, along with the Salvadoran government, that it will not support a negotiation leading to guerrilla participation in the government, although it will support talks leading to the left's participation in the electoral process, Nonetheless, the tone of policy is different. Under Secretary of State Alexander Haig it was one of confrontation in the name of anti-communism; under Secretary of State George Shultz it has shifted more toward local and regional conciliation. Not much attention has been given to this shading in Washington. In Central America, where the stakes are much higher, t has been widely noted.

Central America is too torn and polarized to permit any easy optimism. Nor are the present hints of change equally acceptable in all quarters. The Salvadoran feudal right, for instance, like the extreme right in the United States, professes to see an ominous softening of Ronald Reagan's policy. We see something else, especially in El Salvador: a continuity with the latter-day Carter policy that makes it possible for the U.S. mainstream to support a policy of firmness and reform. In brief, El Salvador is still engaged in a desperate struggle, but it is becoming possible to ask whether the Reagan policy may not work.

Other Opinion

"The New Imperialism"

The idea that any corner of the world, any along without the guidance of the United States of America is harder to sell to Americans now than it has ever been. The bizarre terms that this friendly assistance can take have been illustrated strikingly hy the Soviet pipeline issue. It can be argued — I would certainly argue it — that the pipeline is on balance unwise. But, having failed to dissuade Europe, the American reaction is to impose sanctions on its closest friends.

An even more striking aspect of the new imperialism is U.S. policy toward Northern Ireland. William Clark, the president's security adviser, has explicitly said that the U.S. government would like a united Ireland.

The impudence of this policy, let alone its folly, is breathtaking. What would U.S. reaction be, one wonders, if Mrs. Thatcher were to declare that Britain favored a change in the status of Puerto Rico or Hawaii or Alaska or California? The scream that Britain had reverted to her imperialist past would be heard clear across the Atlantic.

President Reagan and his close colleague represent the assertiveness factor raised to a new pitch in American foreign policy. It is, ironically, part of his domestic creed that the ordinary American should be left alone to work ont his own salvation. But leaving oon-Americans alone to work out their own salvation is apparently wrong, weak.

It would be hard to think of a better definition of an imperialist — or of a worse long-term threat to the trans-Atlantic alliance. - The Mail on Sunday (London).

'Impervious to Criticism'

Nothing can alter the facts. These are that the present Israeli government under Mr. Be-gin and Mr. Sharon is set upon attaining its military and political objectives at whatever cost to others, and without regard to the standing of Israel in world opinion.

strictures are dictated by anti-Semitism. The truth is that Mr. Begin and company stand branded as fanatics, impervious to criticism or reason. They have had support from the people of Israel in two narrowly contested general elections, but - and this is the historic significance of the horrors of Beirut - that support is now being scriously reconsidered.

— The Sunday Times (London).

It is a painful thing for American Jewish leaders to have to differ openly with the government of Israel Israel, they argue, has enough unremitting enemies and habitual critics as it is. [But] in Israel, a swelling chorus of anguished opinion is demanding an impartial judicial investigation to definitively establish the facts and assess responsibility. Prime Minister Menachem Begin, firing off hroadsides of specious denials and vile accusations in all directions, is resisting this call and behaving very much like a politician with things to hide. But much remains to be revealed if this affroot to Israel's honor and credibility is to be eased.

It is in appreciation of that need that a number of Jewish organizations and leaders in [the United States] — B'nai B'rith, the American Jewish Congress, the American Jewish Committee and spokesmen for the Anti-Defamation League - have oow broken with Mr. Begin to urge a full independent inquiry in Israel into the massacre. In overcoming their tactical reluctance to show less than full public support for the government of Israel, these groups are supporting the eth-ical imperative that justice must be done. They are saying that a people that has suf-fered so much while others hid their eyes must not hide its own eyes now.

1907: Marriageable Girls

NEW YORK - The Baltic has arrived with more than 1,000 marriageable girls on board, each wearing her prettiest dress with her hair beribboned and tied as bewitchingly as possible. Most had a definite idea that they wanted husbands, as they had heard that American girls were too high-minded and asked too much, Miss Clara Johnson, from County Mayo in Ireland, yearned to go on the stage and marry an actor, while Miss Agnes McGirt, from Scotland, wanted a man with dark hair, not a farmer. Miss Kate Donohue thought that any half good-looking man who did not wear red neckties would do, and two Weish girls said they wanted practical men. As most of the girls expect to go West, their prospects of marriage are flattering.

1932: Judge's Home Bombed

WORCESTER, Mass. — Judge Webster Thayer, who seven years ago became a bitter enemy of Communists throughout the world when he sentenced Sacco and Vanzetti to death, narrowly escaped serious injury and possible death when his home here was wrecked by a terrific dynamite explosion that shook neighboring houses and was heard throughout the city. The 74-year-old jurist, who has been the target of repeated Red threats since the famous case, escaped unscathed. However, he was visibly shaken by the ordeal. "I hate to think that because a man does his duty before mankind and God, his penalty is this," he said. Later, he regained his equanimity and remarked. "They cannot kill me that easy."

Questions After the Massacre

• 'If, Like Other Egyptians, I Feel Deep Pessimism ...

CAMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — It is perhaps somewhat unseemly to raise the issue of Egypt's predic-ament in the aftermath of the Beirut massacre, when hundreds of Palestinbodies are lying in mass graves. Still, Egyptians must ask: Why? How

The anguished American Jewish community - and indeed the whole world -- also asks these questions today. But there is this difference:

could the Begin administration allow such a thing to happen?

Egypt has signed a peace treaty with Israel. Inevitably, therefore, when we ask the questions, somewhere in the background an egotistical worry hurks: Why did they do this to us? Egypt has recalled its ambassador from Tel Aviv. For, clearly, if Anwar Sadar's initiative was of crucial importance in opening up an avenue to peace, the way for President Hosni Mubarak to salvage the Camp David accords is not through appeasement.

Egypt, of course, must tread a thin fine, acting firmly but not rashly, in order not to jeopardize a peace treaty that is aiready hanging by a thread. But it would be a mistake for us to confirm a suspicion in some minds that the fear of an Israeli re-occupation of the Sinai and American withdrawal of its multimillion-dollar aid has neutralized us and left a clear field for Mr. Begin and his military apparatus to wreak havoc. If anyone holds the view that Egyptians can sit back and savor the fruits of Camp David while their Arab brothers are being slaughtered, he has fallen party to a dangerous illusion. Sooner or later we may be drawn into the cycle of violence. The horniying spiral of reprisals and counter-reprisals could lead Egypt back to view Israel as a thorn to be pulled from the Arab body, a cancer

> The slaughter of the Palestinians has raised serious questions in the mind of many Egyptians. The men who carried out Mr. Begin's orders to massacre the Palestinian villagers at Deir Yassin in 1948 presumably came straight out of the horrors of Dachau and Auschwitz — a world in which only ruthlessness and brute force seemed to ensure survival. But Ariel Sharon is Israeli-born and was reared in the Labor movement at a time when it was still committed to humanism and socialist internationalism. How came he then to view the world through the eyes of the hunted? This is a question that no classic theory of international relations can answer, because what happened at the Chatila and Sabra camps has not only left an indelible moral stain on only leat an index notation and its standards of Realpolitik, patently opposed to the Begin government's interest in its own survival — not to mention Isra-to be eradicated before it spreads.

actions that enhanced the aura of the el's interests, which were damaged by one's blood without a deep and permanent scar. I don't know. But I pretty much know what hapsened at Sabra and Chatria. And that it makes no difference whether the Begin administration was an accessory to the massacre or was merely. an acquiescent observer. These are not grounds for reneging on Egypt's commitment to the existence of Israel. But II, like other Egyptians, I feel deep pessionsm, it is because we are troubled by this thought: If it was possible for the sons of those who suffered from Hitlet's persecution to map out the plant for "pacification of Galilet" that led to the Chatila and Sabra massacres. what is to assure us that in a generation or two there will not arise another military leader with a psyche like. Mr. Sharon's who will decide once and for all to "pacify the entire area in the name of israeli survival?

Egypt's role was to ferry kneel across to the community of Middle Eastern nations to which it had sought admission. King Hussein's recent statement that he was willing to negotiate with Israel about West Bank's future was one of several signs that other Arab countries were on the verge of accepting Israel and granting it long-sought legitimacy. Today I wonder which of them will want to follow Egypt's perilous course. Re-flecting on the betrayal of Egypt, will they not think it a pariful fool for having mortgaged its fate to the good faith of the Israeli government?

The writer, a doctoral candidate in political science at Harvard University, Palestine Liberation Organization. is author of the forthcoming "Enemy in Perhaps we must turn for the author of the Event Land: Receiving of the First Egyptian Visitor to Israel to carry 2,000 years of persecution in articles calling for peace with Israel."

What Are the Palestinian People Supposed to Feel Now?

DARIS - How many massacres, how many more men and women, babies and adolescents, Christians and Moslems, how many more Jews and Palestinians must die before the world awakes from its torpor, regains its senses and finds the courage to say what we Palestinians have said all along: that the orthodox Zionism religiously adhered to by Israel's rulers is a disastrous doctrine for us as well as for the Jews?

How could it be otherwise? How could the world have been duped into believing that this anachronistic ideology could ever succeed in creating a Jewish state in an already populated land, without bloody conflict?

Was it apathy? Perhaps. But the main reason was understandably that, after the horrors of World War II, the world was too busy scrubbing away the stains of shame from its recent history, not knowing meanwhile, not wanting to know, that another episode of human trage-dy was systematically in progress elsewhere. How many people even know the names of our villages and camps which make up the tragic litany of nightmares that our people have endured since the creation of Israel in the heart of our ancestral homeland: Deir Yassin, Kalonia, Qibya, Kafr, Qasim, Qalqilya, Nabi Elias, 'Azzun, Khan Yunis, Sammu', Tel al-Za'tar?

It was at Deir Yassin that Menachem Begin inaugurated his doctrine that any act can be 1948, while the Palestinian village on the outskirts of Jerusalem slept, 200 members of Irgun, the Zionist terror gang, attacked. House by house, the inhahitants were pulled into the streets, lined against walls and shot, regardless By Mohammad Tarbush of age or sex. Homes were dynamited. The attackers raped, tore earnings from women's ears and slaughtered some who were pregnant with carving knives. When day broke, corpses littered the streets. No one was allowed into the village except a Jewish policeman, who reported that one Palestinian had died.

It took a persistent Red Cross officer to unearth the truth. Besides the bodies in the streets, he found 150 corpses stuffed down a well. In all, 243 were left dead.

The survivors were stripped naked and paraded through a Jewish quarter of Jerusalem, to be mocked and spat upon. The then leader of Irgun is oow the prime minister of Israel.

In October 1953, Ariel Sharon led a similar operation against the unsuspecting inhabitants of Qibya, leaving 75 dead and as many wounded. Now Defense Minister Sharon defends his authorization to let his allies enter Sabra and Chatila hy claiming to have warned against killing, "especially women and children."
Neither in their objectives nor in their morbid detail do the Beirut massacres differ from the carnage we have previously endured. Is not the mass murder of Palestinians consistent with the cold logie of Zionism, which dictated the destruction, expulsion or, at best, oppression of the indigenous people of the coveted land? To us Palestinians, these dangers are not a mere abstraction. Ask the refugees who fled their homes in the panic of terror and war, never to be allowed to return. Or the young people who saw compatriots die under Israeli bullets for the crime of marching in peaceful demonstration. Or the librarians who have watched helplessly as the contents of their shelves were ransacked by Israel's police. Ask the orphans of Deir Yassin, Sabra and Chanla, who are unlikely ever to lead normal lives again.

We Palestinians cried out against this threat from our mosques and our churches, from the playgrounds of our schools and the courtyards of our homes, and, when in your more reflective-moments you allowed it, from the columns of your newspapers and your airwaves. The world ignored our warnings. Now, thanks to modern communications technology, the massacre has taken place under your noses.

In its implacable campaign against us, Zion-ist propaganda stopped at nothing to deprive us of what was ours - our literature (we were depicted as aimlessly roaming bedowns), our history (Palestine, the most ancient country on Earth, ceased to exist in their historical narratives), our geography (the cradle of human civi-bization — which grew fruit trees centuries before Europe, perfected irrigation and plant hybridization and was the first nation to produce such luxuries as wine — was presented to the world as strips of desert or malaria-ridden swamp). Thinking people everywhere should have known better. The world's ancient travelers and artists had testified otherwise.

As grim reports of the bloodbath in Sabra and Chatila flashed in and the flickering screen featured Israeli soldiers rounding up our civil-ians, the leaders of a nation of "meathered ex-des" disputed furiously in the Knesset over the fate of the the original people. As a Palestinian,

I felt as if I had been punched all over.

Scores of antiliated Palestinian bodies were displayed tied together so the victims could not displayed tied together so the victims could not flee, or slumped against a wall where they had been lined up and gimned down. As I looked on, vivid images of Deir Yassin and other callamities — both for the Jewish people and our selves — flashed through my mind; but above all, images of our people's lives exploding inder the shells and bombs of Israeli soldiers, or of West Bank settlers strolling arrogantly through our markets and ancient crics.

As I watched, I wondered: What are the intentions of these people? What are they doing to our country, with its ancient customs and traditions, mosques and churches, legendary lakes and rivers, mystical hills and mountains? When the debris of Sabra and Chatila are dug away, when the final toll of that Black Pri-day comes to light, let us also grieve for another victim — the smashed hope for coexistence between Israelis and Palestinians.

So much lost, so little left to lose ... Will anyone now be surprised if, in our despair, the voices of people who once believed it possible to live side by side with the Israelis are stifled: if there is a rebirth of Palestinian extremism indeed if there is an embittered, radicalized insistence that the Israelis have no place at all in our part of the world?

SPD or CDU? The Choosing Is Not America's Business

By Flora Lewis

PARIS — The collapse of West Germany's ocalition, with a new chancellor possible soon and elections contemplated, sharpens a back-room Washington debate that has been going oo for more than a year, Would the United States be better off dealing with conservatives than it has been with Social Democratic Chancellor Helmut Schmidt?

Some Reagan administration officials felt strongly that Mr. Schmidt was too chummy with the Russians and too vulnerable to left-wing pressures in his party for America's com-fort. They think Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic Union would be more in tune with Reagan policy. Mr. Schmidt was aware of that view, and it fed mounting strains in the alliance. But when it came to ide-

ington heads prevailed over what was at coce a naive and an arrogant assessment of American influence

Now, without any push from Washington, Mr. Schmidt's years in power appear to be ending. Bonn is cogrossed io internal political maneuvers. These are a minor matter for West Germany's allies. The main point is that after 13 years of SPD leadership, which brought an opening to the East, the pendulum may be swinging back to the party founded by the late Konrad Adenauer. But it is not the same West Germany as the one the CDU ran before.

There is a worldwide economic recession, and while the government broke over the issue of how to deal with it, Bonn oow speaks for a world eco-

U.S. strategic superiority has visibly disappeared and doubtless cannot be restored. There is as much concern in West Germany at being dragged im-prudently by America into an East-West showdown as there is to make sure of continued U.S. protection. National feeling has revived. It is only anti-American on the edges of left and right, but it is a sensitivity to be taken into account. West Germans no longer look to Washington to find out what is good for West Germany. No doubt Bonn's style will change if Mr. Kohl becomes chancellor. He is a ponderous, measured man with-out Mr. Schmidt's acid tongue and oomic power with a mind of its own. won him new respect for his ability to U.S. strategic superiority has visibly be decisive. Mr. Kohl looks slow and dull in comparison. While he has proved his patience and stamina as opposition leader against a handful of livelier CDU rivals, some in his own party doubt that he has the political crackle to im-pose effective leadership. They wonder how long be would last.

The centrist FDP, which provoked the change by switching sides from SPD to CDU, has lost credibility and may have a hard time staying in the Bundestag. If the CDU won an overall majority, Mr. Kehl would come under intense pressure from the Na-tionalist-minded "Bull of Bavaria," quick temper. Still, Mr. Schmidt's handling of the government crisis has Franz Josef Strauss.

And if there is neither a clear win nor the parliamentary arithmetic to support a CDU-FDP coalition after elections, the rising anti-establishment's "Green" and "alternative" movements may hold the balance of power. They are heirs of the 1968 counterculture — against material-ism, authority, missiles, U.S. policies. The generation gap is large. It worries all West German politicians.

More important for the United States, though, is the broad consensus underlying West German foreign pol-icy. There is no reason at all to suppose that the future government would be any more interested in re-newing the Cold War, cutting trade with the East or giving up détente than Mr. Schmidt has been

The big issues in West Germany now, as in the U.S. campaign, are domestic economic and social policies. There is no question of dismantling the welfare state, despite alarmed outcries from the unions. The debate whether growth can best be relaunched by federal stimulus or by cutting social costs and taxes. America's record, both before and since Ronald Reagan, is no inspiration. Thus, U.S. West German economic quarrels about interest rates and protectionism are not likely to be eased by a change in Bonn. .

For Washington, the key question is what West Germany will do about deploying Euromissiles if U.S. Soviet talks remain stalled, as looks probahic. Both Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Kohl are committed to accepting them. But. there is an active minority in Mr. Schmidt's party which is likely to grow and could pull the whole SPD sharply to the left when it is out of power. This would polarize politics is a way West Germany has not known for more than a generation

MUNICH — Now what, in West Germany's increasingly com-plex political drama? Even if Helmut Kohl, the Christian Democratic chairman, and Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the leader of the Free Democratic Party, push ahead with their plan to topple Helmut Schmidt through a "constructive vote of no-confidence" Friday in order to make Mr. Kohl chancellor, it is iocreasingly unlikely that they can muster the necessary 249 votes in the Bundestag with which to do it. That being the case, it is also increasingly unlikely that they will even try. Technically, Mr. Schmidt and his Social Democrats could continue with a minority government for the rest of the present legislative period, that is, until autumn 1984. But in practical political terms that, too, is impossible, if only because they could not muster partiamentary majorities to pass pending legislation, including the controversial federal budget. The logical move is early elections in November — as Chancellor Schmidt proposed in his Bundestag speech 11 days ago. But the constitution does not allow the chancellor to dissolve parliament and call for new elections on his own. Such a move would require the support of Mr. Kohi and Mr. Genscher. The Hesse elections demonstrated two things: West Germans take a dim view of the kind of political hankypanky and disloyalty that Mr. Genscher and his Free Democratie friends in Hesse have been displaying largely on the figures of the pollsters, not the voters at the polls. Hesse was supposed to have tested' the public mood. The public replied that it does not want a change.

After Hesse, Three Re-Dealt Hands

ft did oot want Hesse's Free Democrats to break their traditional alli-ance with the Social Democrats and coalesce instead, as they have promised to do since June, with the Christian Democrats. Even less did it want the Free Democrats to walk out of their coalition with Mr. Schmidt in Bonn and make Mr. Kohl chancellor. Nor, hy the way, did the Hessians want the Christian Democrats to win an absolute majority with which to govern Hesse alone.

It is the growing realization today that the West German voting public in general feels likewise. And that is why the political crisis precipitated hy Mr. Genscher and his friends is deepening this week.

Just how many friends does Mr. Genscher have? Within his party, resistance to his tactics has been growing since the breakup of the coalition in Bonn on Sept. 17. The party's scathing defeat in Hesse, where it was ahandoned by more than half of its traditional supporters, has turned this intramural opposition into an indignant outcry, threatening a formal breakup of the party.

It comes from the Free Democrats' left and moderate wings — those lib-erals who, on the whole, agree with for the past few months; and the "oew majority" to which Mr. Genscher and Mr. Kohl have repeatedly referred in recent weeks is based other reason than because it had an most of Helmut Schmidt's domestic and foreign policies and who want the coalition to continue, if for no overwhelming mandate from the peo-ple to do so in the last general election, in October 1980.

That wing has already succeeded in calling a special party congress for next month, at which Mr. Genscher's political course and personal future will be on the line. For the past 10 days that wing's faction among the Free Democrats in the Bundestag has been judged strong enough to at least throw doubt on the success of the planned move against Mr. Schmidt.
But the Hesse debacle has added a new element to the equation: Is that wing also strong enough, as the Social Democratic chairman, Willy Brandt, would keep Mr. Schmidt in office? To many in the Social Democratic Party, it sounded like wishful thinking Sunday night, when the votes in Hesse were being counted. But the possibility cannot be ruled out.

Another wrinkle that has been proused: Undo what was done on Sept. 17, annul the divorce and tie the leftliberal knot again as if nothing had happened. "If the Italians were able to do that in August, why not us?" some Social and Free Democrats are saying, alluding to Rome's short-lived government crisis this summer. But est Germans are not Italians.

The Hesse election reshuffled the deck and raised the ante, but Germans are not poker buffs. They pre-fer skat, a three-handed game whose object is to fulfill any of various contracts, with scoring based on strategy and on tricks won. Jack Lang and His Cultural Crusade

By Louise Lief

PARIS — Ever since July, when Jack Lang called for a "crusade" against U.S. "financial and intellectual imperialism" at UNESCO's Second World Conference on Cultural Policy in Mexico, Socialist France's shaggy-haired minister of culture has been at the center of a storm of protest.

In his speech, "Culture and Economy — the Same Battle," he called for war against "a certain invasion, a certain submersion of fabricated images from the outside and of standardized music" that level national cultures and want to impose a uniform way of life on the entire planet."

"Our destiny," he asked an en-thusiastic audience of Third World delegates: "Is it to become the vasture. Lang's remarks — which were foreshadowed by his criticism a year ago of the Deauville American film festival as a publicity stunt by a foreign industry that needs no extra advertising in France — prompted complaious from the Americans, and criticism from French intellectual circles.

It was clear in a recent interview in Lang's sumptaous rococo office that the culture minister was trying to play it cool. "We don't want to defend ourselves against American art," he maintained. "American art is welcome here. And I repeat, on the contrary, our doors are open wider than ever."

What he meant in Mexico, he said, was that the bases of cultural exchanges had to be reconsidered with an eye to greater equity in fi-nancial relations. "Like, unfortunately if you wish, the audiovisusals of an immense empire of prof- al industry. It is at the same time an art and an industry. One must distinguish between the two."

Lang, 43, a former professor of international law, had already stirred comment in French circles with his nnconventional plans to In his efforts to bring culture to in the areas that he has singled out

Rare Jommelli Opera Revived in Amsterdam

By David Stevens

AMSTERDAM — What started as the Baroque revival has gradually A expanded, particularly in opera, to a general filling in of the musical landscape of the 17th and 18th centuries so that it can be perceived as cootinuity instead of as a succession of isolated peaks.

Now comes Niccolò Jommelli, a Neapolitan who speni 16 years as the head Kapelbneister at the ducal court in Stutigart. He has a tochold in history — as the "Italian Gluck," as the real inventor of the "Mannheim" orchestral crescendo, as the composer of some 70 operas but his works have been virtually unplayed since his lifetime (1714-74). The prime mover of the lively production here of Jommelli's "La Schiava Liberata" is Alan Curtis, the University of California musicologist who has been a scrupulous reviver of early operas, from Monteverdi and Cavalli to Handel and Rameau, and who has a growing reputation in Europe as the conductor of his own performing versions.

Jommelli as a candidate for musical exhumation did not occur to him, Curtis recalled, until a series of events that included the discovery of a "good and unique" piece of sacred musie in a Toulouse library, coming across the ubiquitous Dr. Burney's judgment of Jommelli as the most distinguished composer of the librettos of Metastasio, and the acquisition by Berkeley of some Jommelli letters. With Marita McClymonds, then a graduate student and now a recognized authority on the composer, Curtis studied the operas and decided that "La Schiava Liberata," a three-act serio-comico work produced in 1768 in Ludwigsburg, was "the best of the bunch."

"It could not have been done in Univ. not even in Maries." Curtis said

"It could not have been done in Italy, not even in Naples." Curtis said. "because the orchestra parts are much too difficult. The second violin part is difficult because his second violinist was Pietro Nardini, who was later known as the composer of very difficult violin concert "The orchestra is not so different from the Baroque, but the balance is different. The winds almost oever double the strings, but add subtle punctuation, sometimes just with a single, well-placed oote." As usual, Curtis's 26-piece orchestra uses original period instruments or copies.

This revival is a well-deserved early-season hit. The libretto has multiple points of similarity with that of Mozart's later "Abduction From the Seraglio," although it is far more complicated. Filippo Sanjust has provided an attractive and flexible Moorish setting. Rhoda Levine's staging is energetic and intelligent and, while favoring the comic over the serious, gets its laughs in the right places.

Musically, the work was every bit the delight suggested by the academic research; varied, inventive and dramatically sensitive both in the orthogonal property and the property and the property and dramatically sensitive both in the orthogonal property and dramatically sensitive both in the orthogonal property and the property and property and chestra and the vocal lines. It was played with admirable verve and spirit by Curtis and his ad hoc Complesso Barocco. The excellent, well-balanced cast included Sandra Browne in the castrato role of Selim, Rachel Ann Morgan as the Constanze-like Dorimene, the soprano Leena Kiilunen as her rival Elmira, Patricia Rozario and Martyn Hill as a splendid comie pair, Willard White a sonorous Albumazar, the light-voiced countertenor Andrew Daltoo as Don Garzia, and Wouter Goedhart as Solimano, the basso monarch who unravels all with his magnanimity.

Algeria, Italy Sign Gas Deal

Rome — Italy signed a long-term agreement Monday in buy natural gas from Algeria, ending a two-year pricing haggle that de-layed the flow of gas through a trans-Mediterranean pipeline for nearly a year.

The agreement, negotiated by traly's foreign trade minister, Nicola Capria, and Energy Minister Belkacem Nabi of Algeria, was initialed by the two ministers at a ceremony at Premier Giovanni Spadolini's office.

The accord sets a price of $4.41 per million British thermal units delivered — above the $4 Italy reportedly had offered but below the $5 to $5.50 the Algerians were be-lieved to be seeking. The price will be linked to a basket of crudes and will be reviewed periodically.

Gas-trade analysts said Algeria had managed to bring the price up well above the $3.50 specified in a 1977 agreement with Italy, but they said the contract still fell short of Algeria's objective of pricing gas at parity with crude oil, in terms of beat delivered.

25-Year Pact

Under the 1977 contract between the Italian state energy group ENI and Algeria's Sona-trach, Algeria is committed to supply Italy with 12.5 billion cubic meters of gas (about 437.5 billion cubic feet) for 25 years. Italy is to buy four billion cubic meters of beginning in 1983, rising to its final level by 1986.

The gas should start to flow to Sicily through the $3.5-billion un-dersea pipeline in November.

Under the 1977 accord, the ga should bave started flowing last October when the pipeline was completed by the two countries. But in September Algeria demanded a higher price.

Italy estimates the current market price at around $3.80 and has accepted a higher Algerian quote on the understanding that Algeria will use the difference to buy Italian goods, Trade Ministry sources said in Rome.

Italian newspapers said that, un-der the accord, the Italian govern-ment will pay the difference be-tween the market price of the gas and the price agreed on between Mr. Capria and Mr. Belkacem.

Officials said pressure for a set-tlement increased because of uncertainty over alternative supplies from the Soviet Union through the controversial Siberian pipeline and because Algeria-had blocked imports from Italy in order to in-crease pressure during the gas ne-

The Algerians have led a producer campaign to price gas at par-ity with crude oil. But largely because of projected Soviet sales, generously supplied in the late 1980s. Soviet officials have agreed to sell West Germany gas from the Siberian pipeline using a 1981 base of $4.70, close to the new Algerian-

Italian price.

In a continuing effort to reduce dependence on crude oil and diversify sources of energy supply, the Rome government itself bopes to sign new gas supply contracts with Moscow. Last month, the govern-ment joined France and Britain in defying the embargo ordered by President Ronald Reagan,

For Allied, a Hodgepodge That Confuses Observers

By Barnaby J. Feder

NEW YORK — Even before it acquired Bendix, Allied Corp. had convinced Wall Street that the company's decision last year to drop "Chemical" from its name made sense.

With a growing oil and gas business and major acquisitions that plunged it into electrical and electronic products, instrumentation and the health field, Allied clearly is not the old chemicals, fibers and plastics company it used to be quisitive chairman and chief executive officer, has often outlined Allied's long-range goals, analysts said the changes have come so fast that investors have had a hard time figuring out how to assess Allied's current performance and near-term prospects.

On Friday, Allied acquired Bendix for nearly $1.9 billion, or $85 a share, ending a complex takeover battle that started in August when Bendix announced that it wanted to take control of Martin Marietta. Under last Friday's accord, Allied retains about (Continued on Page 11, Col. 1)

The decision by Mr. Agee to drop his bid for Marietta and accept a takeover by Allied would appear to end a tumultuous two years for Bendix, once a relatively obscure producer of automotive parts and aircraft equipment. Although Mr. Agee will remain chairman of Bendix and become president of Allied, the ultimate decisions affecting the company will be made in Morris Township, New Jersey, the headquarters of Allied.

"I expect things will begin in subside" once the takeover is completed, said William C. Roney 3d, a securities analyst with Wm. C. Roney & Co., a Detroit brokerage firm. "I suspect,

For Marietta, Heavy Load Of Debt and Cut in Equity By Isadore Barmash New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Martin Marietta Corp. appears to many analysts to have been battered and bloodied by its costly victory to retain its independence. They believe its scope has been reduced, its equity cut, its debt load inflated and its earnings potential dimmed, its future appears cloudy, they add, and the giant aerospace-aluminum-cement producer may bear lasting scars.

But the company is saying, in effect: Wait, things aren't quite what they appear, "The analysts' perception that our independence came too dearly is a very narrow concept," said William D. Keough, Marietta's director of investor relations.

"It's like looking at one frame in a movie film," he said, "not even an indication of what's coming until you see many more frames. Because of a combination of tax deferrals, a cyclical ternaround in non-aerospace divisions and aerospace programs coming to fruition, our near-term and long-term futures are much brighter (Continued on Page 11, Col. 5)

U.S. Trade Deficit Widened in August To Record Level

WASHINGTON — The U.S. merchandise trade deficit widened in a record $7.1 billion in August as the American appetite for foreign good increased, the Com-merce Department said Monday. The August deficit followed a $2.3 billion deficit in July and a $3.4 billion deficit in June and was the largest monthly deficit ever recorded, officials said.

The value of imports jumped 20.2 percent in August to $24.6 billion compared with the previous month, when imports declined 8.1 percent, the department said. The value of exports was down 2.9 per-cent in August to $17.5 billion compared to July when the value of exports was down 4.2 percent. Impressed by Rise

Trading patterns so far this year have suggested that the 1982 mer-chandise trade deficit could exceed last year's $39.7 billion shortfall, Commerce officials said.
"It's not hard to envision" a larger annual deficit, David Lund, a department trade specialist, said. Mr. Lund said the import surge alone may have also set a record. "I'm impressed by the breadth of that rise," he said. He said it was not a statistical abberation.

Mr. Lund said the increase in imports "was what you might expect to see if demand were firm-ing," perhaps an early sign of ei-ther a recovery from the recession or anticipation by dealers of a strong Christmas season. He said the increase in imports was confirmed by the fact that the Customs Service reported process-ing a record 470,000 import documents in August.

The U.S. current account, which includes purchases and sales of services as well as goods, showed a $2.1 billion surplus during the second quarter and a $3.2 billion surplus through the entire first half of the year, Although trade in services, from banking to insurance, has been growing at a slower rate than trade in goods, it has consist-ently shown a surplus offsetting merchandise trade deficits.

Oil Inflow Climbs

The cost of oil imports in August increased 8.6 percent to $6.2 billion in August, partially a reflection of the approaching winter heating season, Mr. Lund said. Oil imports climbed in value by 8.4 percent in the previous month.

The volume of oil purchases climbed 8.6 percent to a level of 6.14 million barrels a day in August, compared to 5.65 million barrels a day in July.

The trade deficit with members of the Organization of Oil Export-ing Countries was $1.35 billion in August, compared with $1 billion in July and $568 million in June.

But far more striking than the expected increase in oil purchases was the $3.6 billion increase in the was the 33.0 billion increase in the value of imports other than oil, a category which had dropped by $2.4 billion the previous month. The increase in the nation's appetite for imported products other than oil was generally across the beard and set expendice that the board and set a record for that category as well. The increases affected textiles, clothing, footwear, office machines, communications equipment, tires, and paper. How-ever, imports decreased for metal ores; scrap metal and iron and steel mill products.

In line with an increase in domestic production, Canadian auto imports showed an increase of 57 percent to $758 million for August.

Mr. Lund said another significant factor fueling the August defi-cit was an increase in imports from Mexico, where goods have become relatively cheaper because of de-valuation of the peso. At the same time, exports to Mexico, made more difficult by new controls on currency exchanges, have de-creased. Exports to Mexico that had been at a level of about $1.2 billion in May and June slipped to $1 billion in July and to $795 miltion in August.

Manufactured

Still another factor was the decline in the August figures of a six-able amount of exports that were attributable in the previous two months to the sale overseas of floating oil-drilling rigs, Mr. Lund

The trade in manufactured goods showed a deficit of $2.8 billion in August. In July the same category had moved to a surplus of $1.1 billion after a deficit of $875 million in June. The deficit for the first eight months of this year was $25.5 bil-lion. All of the figures were adjusted for normal seasonal variations in trading.

weeks. The company's sales are off sharply this year.

The announcement came a few days after officials with the parent company in Wolfsburg, West Germany, expressed concern over developments in the world automobile market, attributing their negasalts in North America.

The departure of Mr. MeLernon, who led the company through some of the most difficult years the U.S. auto industry has known, had been rumored for weeks because of slumping sales of the company's once-popular Rabbit. The VW statement said that Mr.

McLernon "gave no indication of his future plans." According to a VW spokesman, deliveries in the United States in the first eight months of this year totaled 145,964 units, 36.6 percent less than in the same period last year. The U.S. company was marginally profitable in 1981, earning slightly more than $500,000, after registering losses in 1980 of $38.1 million.

Mr. McLernon, a former General Motors officer, will be replaced Nov. 1 by Noel Phillips, a former severely limited for policy makers in Japan

With exports falling and domestic demand staying slow, there appears to be no immediate solution to a host of problems besetting the Japaoese economy. In addition, concern has emerged that the weakness of the yen could evectually start affecting price levels and corporate results.

Whife the yen has been responding nervously to the developments in the U.S. monetary policy and international financial situations, including Mexico's trouble, it is yet to shake off its weakness. Given the extreme sluggishness of domestic markets, the yen's weakness will not immediately translate into a rise in prices of domestic goods, but its prolonged weakness wiff eventually start affecting them.

Il already is putting a serious squeeze on energy-related enterprises, like oil refiners and power generation companies, through increased costs of raw.materials and fuels.

At the moment domestic prices are very calm. Wholesale prices rose 0.2 per cent in June and 0.6 per cent in July, but the rise was almost excfusively attributable to bigher import prices, especially those of crude oil and coking coal. The rise of domestic product prices in July was a marginal 0.2 per cent. Prices of basic materials rose 1.9 per cent, intermediate products 0.5 per cent, and finished products 0.2 per cent. These trends indicate that the impact of the yen's weakness is still limited to the upstream of the production

Consumer prices are also exhibiting an unusual calmness. The index for June remained unchanged from that for the preceding month and was up only 2.2 per cent from a year earlier. In July, prices grew even more subdued, with the iodex dipping 0.8 per ceot from June and its year-to-year margin narrowing to 1.9 per

Exports slow Exports in dollar value on a customs basis dropped 1.3 per cent in July from the previous month after seasonal adjustment. The drop followed a 6.5

per cent decline in the April-June period from the preceding quarter. Likewise, imports in July fell 0.9 per ceot from June following a 10.4 per cent drop in the Aprif-June period. Both ex-ports and imports fell for the sixth consecutive month in a year-to-year comparison, with The decline being particularly precipitous after May.

The slump of exports has been caused by a combination of stagnant overseas economies, trade frictions, and dwindling foreign currency holdings of oil-producing coun-drop in crude and raw oil. For the first seven months of this year, exports declined 5.0 per ceot from a year earlier. So did imports by 6.2 per cent. Export letters of credit received, a leading indicator of exports, also dropped 7.3 per cent in July from a year earlier. It is increasingly fikely that the total value of exports and imports during 1982 will end up behind the 198t figure.

Capital investment dwindl-

With the business outlook growing in severity, corporate capital investment is estimated to grow by a marginal 1.7 per cent during the six months to June, and fall off by I.8 per cent io the following six months, according to an Economic Planning Agency survey announced August 6. It also noted that variances in the rate of growth of investment according to the size of firm are bound to be enlarged: it is only big corporations, especially those with capitalization of Y5 billion or more, that are slated to mark a steady increase in capital jovestment. However, as economic stagnation gets protracted, capital investment is cooling not only at smaller firms, but at big ones as well,

Orders for machinery

Private orders for machinery, a feading Indicator of capital investment, dropped 13.7 per cent in the second quarter from the prior period. Orders placed by power generation companies fell 52.8 per cent in reaction to a sharp 112.8 per cent rise in the preceding period, while orders for ships continued to fafl, by 52.5 per cent following a 11.7 per cent decline in the preceding period. Private orders, exclusive of those placed by power companies and those for ships, dipped 0.2 per cent for two consecutive quarters. The machinery industry forecasts a continued decline in private order awarded in the third three years. It is still premature to pass judgment as to how long this trend will sustain itself. Labor Ministry surveys show that both this year's gain in summer bonuses and wage settlements are smaller than the comparable percentages for last year. Prospects for winter bonuses are dim. It is likely, therefore, that disposable income this year will not grow as fast as it did tast year. Moreover, the percentage of non-consumption expenditures like tax and social insurance premium; to net income has been fast growing --- 15.3 per cent in the first half of 1982 compared with 14.1 per cent a year earlier and 10.9 per cent fire years before. This is turning out to be a major drag on consumption expenditures.

Slow production Mining and manufacturing production in June rose 1.7 per cent from the preceding month after continuous month-tomonth decline since last November, except in March. However, manufacturers are expected to continue to cut back production for the time being, as indicated by a decline in capacity utilization and aggravation in seasonally-adjusted unemployment in June to 2.48 per cent 1 from 2.35 per cent in May) or 1.42 million persons.

Stalemate in policy

Beset by a multitude of problems, policy-makers are finding options severely limited virtually nothing seems to be immediately effective. Japan can do nothing about the slowdown of overseas demand. At atime when two major areas of final demand - exports and personal consumption - are bereft of strength, it looks doubtful if augmentation of public works investment, which is strongly urged by some quarters, can work as pumppriming, leading the Japanese economy out of the doldrums."

One of the prime factors for the policy stalemate is the massive shortfall of the treasury revenues. The virtually bankrupt fiscal rebuilding program should now be pul to an exhaustive review so that the Government can come up with a more practical and workable schedule to lay the foundations for the restructuring of the Japanese econo-

Allied Turns Into a Confusing Conglomerate

"Ed Hennessy has put a lot of stuff together since he took over in 1979, but what has he got?" asked Martin Ziegler, a long-time chemi-cal industry analyst who has fol-lowed the company for Moseley, Hallgarten The inter the cut and I deal Inc. "The jury is out and f don't know when it will come back. It could be five years before we find out whether the way he has altered the profile is worth it."

Allied has been restructured into five main business segments under Mr. Hennessy; chemicals, includ-ing agricultural and specialty

Oil and gas operations, the leading income producer, were expanded by John T. Connor, Mr. Hened by John T. Compor, Mr. Hennessy's predecessor. Allied bought Eltra Corp. in 1979 for $592 million and Bunker Ramo in 1981 for $358 million to form the core of the electrical and electronics group. The health and scientific products group was orga-

A sixth business group covers a hodgepodge of embryonic efforts in fields such as lasers, amorphous metals and powdered metals.

It all seemed to be coming together smoothly enough until the oil market slumped and the reces-sion cut into the performance of both new and old businesses. During the first six months of this year, net income dropped 15.2 percent, to $145 million, or $3.39 a share, while sales rose 1 percent, to $3,21 billion.

The problem in the minds of some analysts is that paying for ac-quisitions such as Eltra, Bunker Ramo and Fisher at a time when the poor economic climate is limit-ing their contributions to earnings could be penalizing shareholders by as much as $1 a share.

The Bendix acquisition at such a time is expected to create doubts among lovestors concerned with oear-term prospects. Even those enthusiastic about the company, such as Jay Harris, an analyst who follows Allied for the institutional research arm of Balis & Zorn Inc., expect the move to exert down-ward pressure on Allied's stock.

"I think the company is well-positioned," Mr. Harris said. "If an error is being made, it is in not allowing enough time for the earlier acquisitions to prove themselves before embarking on this one.

Bendix Loses Freedom; Agee Loses Power

(Costinued from Page 9) though, this outcome was not Bendix's ultimate objective when they set out on this adventure." If the high adventure is over for Mr. Agee, it may not be for Bendix employees, who watched for a month as various divisions of the corporation were rumored to be candidates for trading away as part of yet another complicated transaction. Edward L. Hennessy Jr., Allied's chairman, indicated at news conference Saturday that while he had no immediate plans for Bendix, "some restructuring of our balance sheet will have to be entirely clear. Mr. Hennessy has said that Mr. Agee, despite his title as president of Allied, will be limit-ed to administering Bendix. Mr. Agee will not be involved in acquisitions, Mr. Hennessy said. "We have not determined what Mr. Agee will do as president of Allied," Mr. Hennessy said at the

Mr. Agee put the most positive interpretation on the end result in extensive interviews over the week-end with local newspapers. "I have no doubt in my mind that this was the best deal for Bendix and its shareholders," Mr. Agee told The Detroit Free Press.

He did, however, acknowledge that he misjudged Marietta's deter-mination to remain independent and its capacity to resist. He said be had boped all along that the takeover could be on friendly terms and added that he would have been willing to concede the chief executive post of a combined Bendix-Martin Marietta to Thomas G. Pownall of Marietta, but he said the subject was never raised. He said Bendix officials had considered the possibility that Marietta might begin a coun-teroffer, but assigned it a low probability because the company did not have sufficient financial muscle. Marietta enlisted the assistance of United Technologies

Corp. in its counterattack, something Bendix planners had not anticipated. (On Monday, United withdrew its offer to buy Bendix shares, as expected in light of the Allied-Bendix-Marietta accord.) "The big losers in all this are the corporations themselves," said Alan Benasuli, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York. "The fact is that $2 bil-lion has been paid out and it's irre-versible. Companies that were financially strong are now a lot more leveraged and they will have to issue stock at a significantly lower price than they paid for the shares acquired to put their bal-ance sheets back in shape."

Sir Peter Macadam, Chairman, comments:

"Our businesses in general have performed well in difficult circumstances, although improvement was not at the same excellent rate as in 1981."

"The results for the first half of this year reflect our ability to continue to grow despite worldwide recession, with turnover up by 13 per cent in sterling terms, pretax profit up 21 per cent and attributable profit by 32 per cent, when compared with the same period last year."

"There was some decline in total Group cigarette volume, but improvements in margins in some major markets contributed to a satisfactory increase in tobacco profits."

"The US retail industry entered a phase of harsh competition with much higher promotional activity...the hard going has temporarily arrested BATUS Retail's high rate of profit growth... Retailing in the UK has continued to be difficult but International Stores made a modest profit in the first half of the year."

"Appleton Papers in the USA performed well...Wiggins Teape improved its results in the UK. There were good results from the carbonless copying peper business in Europe."

This is not any easy time to predict the outcome for the year with any precision. The second half of the year will not show the growth in profit reported in the first half but, subject to any adverse changes in exchange rates, I expect the year as a whole to demonstrate a real advance on last year."

Debt Grows Ominously At Marietta

than the present. And, given those and other points, who is to say that our stock cannot rise to $75 a share from the $48 a share Bendix paid for it?"

Maybe so. But Marietta, which suffered a 44-percent drop in its net income for the first half despite a 6-percent gain in revenue, this week has the aspect of a trailer-truck jackknifed between two bigger trailer-trucks.

After Bendix attacked last month with a purchase of 25 million Marietta shares at $48 each for a $1.2-billion investment, Marietta bought about 10 million Ben-dix shares for $750 million, borrowing heavily. Last Wednesday, Allied Corp. stepped in with a $2.3 billion offer to acquire both Bendix and the 30 percent of Marietta stock not already owned by Bendix. Separately, Allied dickered with Marietta to swap the Bendix stock owned by Marietta for the Marietta stock owned by Rendix Marietta stock owned by Bendix.

The result was to give Marietta its independence but at a cost of $450 million — the gap between Marietta's and Bendix's stock purchases. It also left Marietta with debt of about $1.3 billion, up from about $500 million.

"Marietta is now a company with only about $400 million in equity, down from $1.2 billion, while its debt has sharply expand-ed," observed Alan Benasuli, aerospace analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "That makes it a financially crippled company after having added a lot of debt to stay inbought. Now it has to increase its equity and maybe issue new stock, but how much and at what price? Who will buy the stock even at $48, the price Bendix paid? It's all a very mixed bag — and rather Marietta shares, which stood at $43.50 when trading was halted last Thursday on the New York Stock Exchange, sank to $34 when trading reopened early Monday. The shares were trading at around $24 in early August. Guy P. Wyser-Pratte, an arbitrageur for Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc., said Marietta may be independent but that it has become financially bereft.

Brazil Widens Limits On Imported Products

RIO DE JANEIRO - The Banco do Brasil has issued a communique widening the list of products that cannot be imported into Bra-zil. The move is aimed at stopping imports of products that are produced internally in sufficient quantities to meet demand, a senior official of the central bank said Monday.

The decision particularly hits imports for the chemical, petro-chemical and pharmaceutical sectors, as well as industries that depend on imported machinery components and spares.

U.S. Tool Orders At Lowest for '82

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — New orders for machine tools fell in August to the year's lowest level, according to the National Machine Tool Builders' Association.

The $82.9 million of new orders placed in August was 22 percent below July's rate and 61 percent below that of August 1981, the association said Sunday. But shipments of new machine tools rose slightly during the month, the association said. August's total of $257.2 million was 3 percent above July's rate, although it was 21 percent below August 1981.

Total orders for the first eight months of 1982 were 51 percent below those placed in the corresponding 1981 period, while shipments were 20 percent lower.

James A. Gray, the association's president, said the August order rate was "hardly heartening to our recession-beleaguered industry." But he noted that machine tool makers were somewhat encouraged by activity at the International Machine Tool Show in Chicago, which closed Sept. 17.

He said that while attendance at the trade show was below 1980's record, the association was impressed with the turnout of 96,000, which he called "remarkable in light of the economy." Mr. Gray said the trade show was evidence of "a high level of interest in the technology and the productivity offered by modern machine tools. Unfortunately, the state of the economy is dictating reluctance on the part of otherwise eager machine tool buyers."

At the end of August, the industry's backlog stood at $1.7 billion, representing about seven months of work at current shipment rates.

THE TORCH IN MY EAR

Reviewed by John Leonard

TF YOU thought you had heard I more than enough about Elias Canetti's mother in the first volume of tunate title for any book - deals principally with Canetti's weaning of himself away from her in the direction of cism; about Karl Kraus, the Viennese critic whose lectures and whose magazine. Die Fackel (The Torch), made such a lasting impression on a sur-passingly impressionable young Canetti; about George Grosz. Bertolt Brecht and Isaac Babel, all of whom he met on a visit to Berlin, and about his grappling at the writing table with mass psychology (in his "Crowds and Power"), obsessional neurotics him, up to a point. A case could be made that suggests he turned to fic-tion before "Auto-da-Fé," in his let-ters to her. She was in Paris, fuming at his infatuation with Veza From Vien-

Heine, "a person who had found characters in great literature and inserted them for her own multiplicity," teased him for being "an inveterate misogyn-ist." If you think of yourself as Sam-

And no wonder, finally, that the image of Thomas Marek, the philoso-pher who so powerfully haunts Canet-ti at the end of this volume, also paralyzes him. Marek, with the eyes of Meamer, was a brilliant, disembodied brain, a paralytic who had to be pulled around in a wagon. Who pulled the wagon? Marek's mother.

I don't mean to reduce Canetti as he reduces Freud. All I know of him is what he tells me, and his attitude toward Frend, like his attitude — which is extremely hard to find — on

Revolutionary Socialism

Perhaps he is fearful of the freedom implicit in a riot or in formulations as gut turning and mind bending as psy-choanalysis and revolutionary social-ism. Caneti is famous for his "indignation against death," and yet no important writer I know of who has spent so much time in Paris, London. Vienna Frankfurt or Berlin, is less existential." Inside his "rhetone of accusal," he will not forgive his mother for removing him from Switzerland. Today, with a second wife and a first child, he lives in Zurich.

At least Nabokov, on disdaining

Freud, was witty, and Jorge Luis Borges plays with the Oedipus com-plex as if it were a kitten. Kalka, too, cracks a lopsided smile. (I am mentioning major writers who were, like Canetti, immune to what Susan Son-tag calls "the temptation of the left.") Canetti prides himself on "the earnestness of my frame of mind."
"Comedy of character," without a larger context, embarrasses him. "I don't care for jokes."

There are no jokes in "The Torch in My Ear," nor much irony except at the chilly expense of others. He willed himself to a Nobel Prize, after looking at Brueghel and contemplating Gil-gamesh. He likes Isaac Babel because "both of us were filled with the digni-ty of learning." He doesn't like Brecht because Brecht wrote an advertisement for an automobile in order to get one. He disposes of the critic Kraus a very disappointing portrait — be-cause Krans liked Brecht too much and, besides. Kraus was a surrogate

But he wears the reader down and wins a weird approval. At age 20, filling his notebook with a list of his mother's insults, he knew he'was very good; if the world didn't admit it, so much less for the world. His solemn stamina astounds. "The true book," he says, is "each individual bound up in himself," He has been, bravely, WIODZ.

OLD traps never fade away — they just go on claiming new victims. By now there are so many that have been discovered over the years that hardly anyone remembers them at all. And, as a practical matter, that isn't necessary. One usually counts on being alerted to a possible trap by spotting an incipient tactical danger in a position.

This is supposed to bring about re-call of the trap, and it almost always does. But there are times when the demon of cuphoria enters to prompt the thought, "If I were to alter the placement of one key piece, I might refute the whole thing and win an easy

United Press International GREEN BAY, Wisconsin — The Green Bay Packers did not play their NFL home opener Sunday at Lambeau Field, but that dido't keep roughly 7,500 fans from whooping it up at a communal tailgate party.

The gathering featured beer, brats and homemade signs commenting on the players' strike. A sign in a van window read "4 Tickets — 50-Yard Line — Negotiable." Declared another: "There Is Life After Football."

Greg Eichmann, a Green Bay resident, said the party was meant as a rebuke to both the players and owners. "I believe in fair bargaining," Eichmann said, "but a strike in this situation is wrong. Garvey and two nther union staff members for having conducted

But if so many members of the Saints feel that way about the fixed wage scale, perhaps many other players around the league feel the same way. If they do, then Garvey should be listening to them, oot scolding them.

The confrontation between Garrevey and Erxleben poses an import-ant question — is Garvey repre-senting the players' wishes, or are the players, by striking, represent-ing Garvey's wishes?

The answer will determine the length of a strike whose details most NFL fans not only do not understand but do not want in understand.

When the strike is eventually settled, the fans won't even be in-terested in the minutae of the new collective-bargaining agreement.
All they will want to know is when the season resumes, how well prepared their favorite team will be for its first game and what the betting point spreads will be. Fan Factor

But more than anyone else the fans, by their devotioo to the NFL., have created the strike.

From the beginning of its cam-paign this year for 55 percent of the owners gross income, the NFL Players Association has shouted: "We are the game." But the players aren't the game, neither are the clob owners.

The fans are the game. Without the fans, there wouldn't be television contracts worth $2.1 billion over five years and no sold-out stadiums — the bulk of the owners' income that has provoked the strike's financial issues. Essentially, the seeds for this strike were sown a quarter of a century ago when Giant fans in Yankee Stadium began chanting, "Huff, Huff, Huff," imploring middle linebacker Sam Huff to stop nucoming ball carriers. That's when the NFL suddenly emerged as a sport of stature, a sport born for television, a sport Madison Av-

Then, in Super Bowl III, Namath and the Jets astunished the Baltimore Colts, justifying the merger of the upstart American Football League with the NFL establishment.

Other Pulpits

Ever since 1970, the NFL has prospered as never before. Until the Jets had been disaster areas for a decade. But the NFL nn longer needed a winner in New York to preach its gospel. It was being preached on TV from Pittsburgh and Miami and Dallas and Oakland, whose teams reigned to the Super Bowl for 10 consecutive years until San Francisco won it

The gospel also has been preached in the parking lots outside stadiums, where the fans gather for tailgate parties.

That's one reason why the Gi-ants, for all their horrendous teams and all their horrendous seasons until last year, always sold all their fans were assured of eight parking-lot parties in the golden glow of September and October, in the cloudy chill of November and De-

Even at $11, the basic price for a Giant ticket, those parties are a bargain.

By the time the Jets could return to Shea Stadium on Sunday against the Houston Oilers, or by the time the Giants could return to Giants Stadium a week from Sun-day against the St. Louis Cardinals, perhaps the fans will, resuming their parties, be able discuss the NFL gospel for that Sunday.

NBA May Open Camps Without Basic Contract

By David DuPree Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Barring last-minute developments, the 23 National Basketball Association teams will open training camps this week without a collective-bar-

This follows a 1981-82 season when NBA teams lost between $15 team owners are at an apparent impasse over a oumber of key issues in regards to a new contract, But there has been no talk of a strike, and both sides said the situ-

Stern added that $64 million went to 1982 player salaries and that the average salary had been $218,000, "I hope we don't have in start

The negotiations have taken an interesting twist. The owners, most of them beset by heavy financial losses, want the players to give back some of the benefits they gained in previous contracts -their contribution to the players' pension plan and their contributions to the medical insurance cov-

The players don't want to give back anything and want increases in pensions and severence pay.

The owners want to put a ceiling on salaries and the players want all contracts guaranteed. The players also want a portion of cable television money, so the owners have asked for the money the players get for signing shoe

Stern, head of the NBA's busiss and legal affairs department said the proposals management is making are necessitated by the fi-nancial situation of the league. "Based oo those figures, we think the players are better able to bear the cost of some of the benehits than we are," said Stern. "All we're trying to do is come up with a formula that will get the owners a return on their investment." The owners have given up their quest for a ceiling oo salaries be-

The Football Tragedy

WASHINGTON — Of all the recent strikes that have affected Americans, none has been as devastating as the NFLfootball players' action against the owners. While we have read about the financial losses to the players and owners, the toll in human tragedy anyone imagined. Here is just one of the scenes that was played out last Sunday in a suburban Washington home. Sam Spilsky found himself sitting in front of his 25-inch TV set, a six-pack by his side, a bag of po-

Japanese Verbalize Pedestrian Warnings

The Associated Press

TOKYO — Japan, which has ovens that tell cooks when the meal is ready and autos that remind drivers to buckle up, has now come up with talking traffic lights. The city of Urawa, near Tokyo, has installed lights with speakers over which a taped woman's voice politely tells pedestrians to wait or

According to the police, traffic lights displaying the message "please wait" are difficult to see and often ignored. The new signals, in addition to red and green lights, say "please wait a moment" and "please cross carefully."

"But what am I going to do?" "Why don't you rake the leaves or wash the car or take a walk?" "I can't do that. It's Sunday. You're supposed to get four foot-ball games on Sunday," Sam said,

"Maybe we could have some friends over," Sam's wife said ner-twisting the TV dials madly.

"I don't want to see anybody. I want to see football. The Redskins are on a streak. We're 2 and 0 now. We could go all the way to the Super Bowl." Sam, would you like to see a movie?" "I'm going to stay right here. Maybe they'll settle the strike before kickoff time." "They won't bave time to put on their uniforms." "So they can play in their street clothes. We used to do it as kids." "Please, Sam, you've got to face reality. There aren't going to be any games this week. Why don't yoo go out and play touch football with the children? They don't know the plays. How can you play football without a game plan?"

"I wish I could do something for you. Tomorrow you'll feel better."
"How can I feel better tomorrow? There won't be any Monday Night Football. What am I going

Sam's wife nuzzled up to him. "We could make love."

"The hell you say."
"I'm serious, Sam. Every fall I'm lonely and I feel I've lost you. This is a good test of our marriage. If you can get through this week without having watched a football game, it means that we have something going."
"Like what?"

"It will indicate I mean more to you than Howard Cosell," "Of course you mean more to me than Howard Cosell. But don't ask me to choose between you and Frank Gifford,"

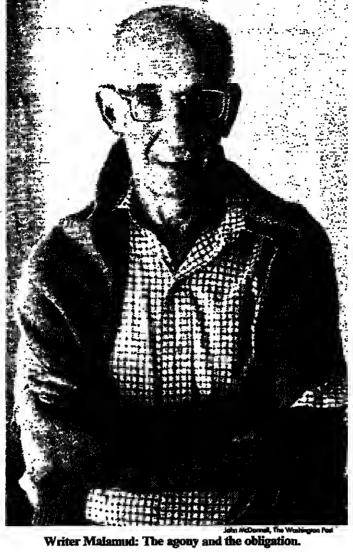

Bernard Malamud: A Ticket to God

Washington Post Service
OLD BENNINGTON, Vermont — How to the mont - How to explain it — the agony and obligation of the thing? "Well," says Bernard Malamud "let me tell you a oke." A good and pious man falls on hard times. He goes to the synagogue, beseeching God to let him win the lottery in exchange for his years of faith. He leaves optimistic, but after nothing happens, he returns and pleads again. Still God remains silent. Finally he goes back a third time, infuriated now, railing at Jehovah, "Why don't you give me a break?" Suddenly the voice of God arises in a wind, and says to the man, "Why don't you give Me a break? Why don't you at least buy a ticket!" Malamud isn't laughing. After all, man's abdication of virtue and inhumanity to God are the subjects of his new novel — the most unusual and certainly the riskiest he has written. Bot at 68, after 11 books including "The Magic Barrel," "The Fixer" and "Dubin's Lives," after the Pulitzer Prize and two National Book Awards, he has outfaced fear. "And that's why in 'God's Grace' you see a man who is not afraid to write about God's role in the universe.

Comforting Percussion The apocalyptic gloom of his subject seems hopelessly out of place in this cheery, sun-washed house a rambling white-frame idyll near Bennington College, where Malamud has taught for 20 years. A comforting percussion of cooking sounds comes from the big kitchen where his wife, Ann, a chipper dynamo of a woman, is devising lunch.

And Malamud himself - still frail from a recent illness - at first appears an improbable Isaiah. With his tidy demeanor, incessant self-editing ("No, wait, there's a better word") and deadpan, scrupulous style, he could be the most successful CPA in Westport. He is uneasy with talking about himself ("That kind of stuff, it's not up his alley," says his friend Philip Roth) and seems reluctant to start. He pauses to choose among several pairs of glasses, then sits down carefully, loog fingers knitted in his lap. Finally, with the anxious geniality of a brave man settling in for root canals, be says, "Now then, I think we can begin,"

"God's Grace" combines a Miltonic ambition of theme with the vernacular crackle of comic dialogue. It begins with the destruction of mankind by nuclear horror and global flood, leaving one accidental survivor, a Jewish scientist named Calvin Cohn, adrift on a ship in the ocean. Cohn and a shipboard chimp named Buz drift onto an Edenic island, where they discover a variety of other monkeys, and Cohn attempts to rebuild civilization by educating them, issuing seven Admonitions in lieu of commandments. Topics familiar from Malamud's earlier fiction — racial hatred, moral despair and the hope of trans-ethnic understanding - here find simian counterparts. In the end, bestiality proves intractable and the fledg-ling society convulses in predatory lust and blood sacrifice.

The idea for the book arose when a colleague at Bennington arranged for a private printing of Malamnd's two previous animal fables, "The Jewbird" and "Talk-ing Horse." "I thought, why not go at a novel with animals as the major characters." Ever since Aesop, he says, it is "the ultimate imaginative act to create a creature - no, wait, there's a better word — a living being who is not buman and yet can talk, giving you the opportunity of presenting a miracle in every sentence he mind for years, "the sense that I had that man was in trouble," that "man in many ways was a disappointment to himself." Not simply the ouclear nightmare, al-though "the fears that have arisen through 20th-century technology are horrendous. They've scared many of us oot of our shoes. We're running even when we're not running."

He researched the book by reading Jane Goodall on chimps, and evolutionary treatises from Darwin to Stephen Jay Gould, and concludes that Cohn's efforts are "within the realm of possibility - so much is being done, new experiments on animals, on language in animals, in a sense I'm just taking the next step." And if the book's gore-sodden denouement seems bleakly pessimistic, Malamud leaves a note of hope m George, a gorilla named slyly after one of the human precursors whose skeleton was discovered by Louis Leakey. "The reader, if he's looking for a positive view, has to look around that." His parents were Yiddish-speaking Russian immigrants who had a small grocery store in Brooklyn. Malamud says he was the beneficiary "not of having happy parents, but of having good parents," who instilled in him the necessity of "doing well by others." He might never have become interested in language but for a bout of pneumonia that nearly killed him. When he recovcred, his father in a fit of joy bought him a 20-volume "Book of Knowledge." In elementary school Malamud wrote stories, mesmerized by exotic words like "Sargasso Sea," regaling his friends with lavish recountings of movies "to save them a dime." Malamud recalls the neighborhood as "unescriting." It did not contribute to his widely esteemed ear for ethnic dialogue - "That's a gift, that's where I was lucky. We had a lot of musicians and actors in the family" — and left him only with "a hunger to be in the country" (which he satisfies six months of the year at Bennington before wintering in a rent-ed apartment in New York.)

He had decided to be a writer well before enrolling at City Col-lege of New York in 1932, but spent his 20s in a series of factory and retail jobs and worked as a clerk in the Census Bureau. In Scottish baritone living in London, won the 1982 International American Music Competition at Camegie Hall in New York. Herford is the first person from outside the United States to win the event in its five-year history. The competition, which rotates yearly among vocalists, pianists and violinists, stresses the performance of 20thcentury American music. Herford, singing an all-American program, was chosen over two other final-ists, Margaret Cusack and Diana Walker-Lenck — both American sopranos. Herford's prize includes a $10,000 cash award, $35,000 in career promotion funds, a recording contract with New World Records valued at $25,000, a Carnegie Hall appearance with the American Symphony Orchestra and a New York recital. . . .

Stephan van den Berg, 20. and John van der Starre, 21, made the 125-mile crossing from Lowestoft, England to Sche-veningen in the Netherlands in eight hours, Officials who followed the voyage said the two sailed separate boards and touched speeds of up to 33.5 miles an hour. * * *

That's the picture Chet Flippo paints in the chapter of the book. The Bal-lad of John and Yoko," written by the editors of Rolling Stone and excerpted in the current issue. He describes Yoko turning up at legal conferences wearing an ancient Egyptian robe, and headdress, while John cared for Sean and learned to bake bread. According to Flippo. Yoko "made no decisions without consulting one or several of the circle of astrologers. psychics, readers, spiritual consultants, numerologists, direction experts, interpreters of I Ching, seers and the like who made up an unofficial cabinet of advisers." > More than 100 sun-kissed maidens from the San Fernando Valley hovered around the cameras dur-ing a weekend television search for the ultimate Valley Girl. But even Moon Unit Zappa, who inspired it all with her hit record "Valley Girls," agreed the Valley Girl craze and trendy motilated syntax spawned by the runaway hit have gone too far — enough to make her "barf out." "It is like a night-mare," the teen age daughter of Frank Zama said as about a thon-sand people drawn by the king lights shouted "Awsome! Tonily awesome!" while the cameras zoomed in on the contestants. "It's ridiculous that anyone would consciously try to imitate this style, dress up, and be proud of it," said Moon. "As far as I'm concerned, it's a bad idea. At each interview, I just get angry because I'm identi-fied with this thing."
